FYI: THE DISCUSSION HERE HAS MOVED AWAY FROM ANALYZING IMAGES AND MAPS OF THE DAM!.

This video below explains why -- and how -- the Chicoms literally distort maps of China.

https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=L9Di-UVC-_4&feature=youtu.be [Open] [Embed] [Embed]

SUMMARY OF THE DISCUSSION THUS FAR:

- China is now facing historic heavy rainfall and floods that are occurring at an early moment prior to the start of their annual flood season. The scale of the heavy rain and flooding can reasonably be said to be affecting roughly ~3/4 of the Yangtze River region. The reason why the Yangtze River region is significant, is because this river is what flows into, and through, the 3GD. Considering the current geopolitical tensions, the effects of these heavy rains and floods are likely to have a negative impact on China's economic and agricultural output and may even threaten the CCP's hold on power. In fact, recent information slowly emerging from China suggests this event will bring serious implications for the Chicoms, regardless of whether or not the Three Gorges Dam (3GD) experiences structural damage. So far information has been shared which both reports on, and shows evidence of, property and agricultural damage on a massive scale. The most important factor to remember here, is that all of these events are occurring at the start of their annual flood season (which runs from July-August), and even without the 3GD suffering from structural damage. Finally, to make this discussion even more interesting, Wuhan just reported a red alert rain warning. Since Wuhan is located downstream from the 3GD, it's plausible Wuhan will soon be flooded. Not to mention the Yichang region within the vicinity of the 3GD experienced flooding caused by heavy rain on June 27.

Thank you for lending your time with this matter.

/end.

What "standard" has been exceeded at the 3GD as a result of the heavy rains and flooding in Yichang?

problem is fundation and the underpressure. you wont see that until the dam is busted >civil engineer here: [...] its a concrete dam [...] it can hold water pressure just fine.

Do you know how they mixed the concrete when they built the dam? Do you know if there is a concrete foundation for the dam, and/or how deep it goes? Do you know the exact amount of water pressure the Yangtze River exerts on the dam? Of course the pressure is likely to vary. Do you know how much the pressure is during periods of sever flooding?

It's likely all of the answers to those questions the CCP knows and keeps that information guarded considering knowing the answers to such questions can open the 3GD to sabotage. And since the 3GD is a national security interest of the CCP, it's even more likely any information relating to the structural integrity of the 3GD is kept secret.

Without knowing the answers to those questions, as well as a number of other variables, your confident claim that the dam can, "hold water pressure just fine" is not sensible.

Engineer fag here too - concrete is only as good as the mix, installation, and reinforcement. Assuming all of these were designed well and installed properly for the underlying geology - there is still the concern with this level of flooding and the period of time. Not sure how much hardening they did it needed downstream or how that bypass to the east is designed to function in the event of a 100+year event. Unlike wuflu - if this happens we may never know why - but we will absolutely know it did.

The answer to all of those questions is that the dam is designed in such a way that even if the water raises so high it overflows the dam it will still stay upright, which is how pretty much every non earthen dam is made. (earthen dams are made the same way really but they would erode).

How is any of this "racist"? Moreover, the majority of the comments participating in the discussions within these breads have been focused on the context of the heavy rains and flooding in China, within the broader contemporary geopolitical environment. Yes, built by Germans, correct? Not Chicoms.

It's a curious thing why so many German flags in these breads defend Chicom construction, when they literally go in after and clean up the Chicom mistakes. Is there a conspiracy here? Do Germans encourage Chicom construction because they know they'll get the contract afterwards to clean up the mess?

See the attached image for related article, with excerpts and link below:
[Posted in previous breads, sharing again here]:
>Chinese state company Sinohydro funded the Coca Codo Sinclair (CCS) Hydroelectric Power Plant in Ecuador, which was inaugurated in November 2016. An inspection of the structure in November 2018 discovered 7,600 cracks in the eight distributors that inject water into turbines. The cracks are due to the use of substandard building materials and inferior welds. The Ecuadorean government appointed German company TÜV SÜD to conduct a yearlong thorough evaluation of the plant.
Again:
>The Ecuadorean government appointed German company TÜV SÜD to conduct a yearlong thorough evaluation of the plant.

>“This shows the poor quality of construction in Chinese infrastructure megaprojects, six of which are hydroelectric plants,” former Ecuadorean Minister of Energy Fernando Santos told Diálogo. “If the cracks can’t be repaired, the machine chamber will have to be replaced. What starts badly ends badly.”

The flow rate is important but it's really about the excess reservoir capacity and there it is likely to amount to just. 5-10% of the amount if water hitting the dam in a 100-year flood scenario ... so there is just a minor delay to the flooding, no real mitigation, all with the genuine possibility that filling the reservoir to 175m indices landslides, or otherwise damages the structure

If a hypothetical dam will burst at 100 meters of water and it's height is 120 why build the extra 20 meters of dam?

Spoiler, all dams can hold water to their tops, overflowing is still bad because it can erode the support or break stuff on the dry side bit a dam that's working as intended won't collapse just from being filled.

I don't understand. What's there to analyze and what's there for the CCP to hide? Can they do something about it if it's close to collapse? If not and if the only option is evacuation, then they'll do just that or they'll forsake millions of people. Whichever the case, doesn't matter to the west. And if they can stop the collapse, if it's even in that state, they've already done it or are in the process of doing so. Essentially, there's no point to this thread. It's a fake happening, a distraction and I'll be called a CCP shill for speaking the truth. Just remember this, you mindless drones. Watch the weather in the province of the dam. Once it clears up and a week or more pass, don't keep bumping this thread if you have even an iota of free will. In be4 the weather is fake and these threads continue into 2021. What a clown world.

Halfway up the reinforced concrete building there is a slice straight through where the entire upper part of the building is held up by what is effectively bare rebar under compression.

>However, 163,000 concrete units of the Three Gorges Dam all passed quality testing and the deformation was within design limits. An experts group gave the project overall a good quality rating.

Yeah I know that China has a massive weather program. I know on a local level they use cloud seeding scuds and change pressures. Australia has a sizable program too. I have looked into hurricane prevention before, I think America has been working on a way to divert or get the hurricane to mature before it reaches land. Last I heard there was talks about using high frequency pulses to lower atmospheric pressure to divert hurricanes. I think theres a north american treaty banning the practice as it displaces farmland and could be disastrous.

What's next, Shanghai?
>Ministry of Water Resources of the Yangtze River Water Conservancy Committee official website news show, 10:00 the evening of 26, the Yangtze River in Wuhan off water up to 24 meters away from the maximum security level as well as 1 Meter. At 8 pm, the reporter saw at the Hankou River Beach that the rising water has submerged the first-level hydrophilic platform, and a red warning line appeared on the edge of the second-level hydrophilic platform. A warning sign was erected at the scene to warn citizens and tourists not to swim. Affected by rainfall and upstream water, the current water level is still rising, reminding the public to pay attention to safety when playing. I don't care about Chinks, and I find their communist dictatorship corrupting the west and slowly eroding our way of life utterly reprehensible, but a thread about some dam which may or may not collapse, which is supposedly entirely out of everyone's control, can't be called anything else but a massive distraction and utterly mindless entertainment for unintelligent people. You know what else could happen this very moment? Grandma might fall down the stairs and break her hip. Why don't you make a thread about that? She'd vote for Trump, her vote would matter! Or maybe some country will spontaneously start a nuclear war due to a handful of soldiers dying or some building getting demolished (China, India, NK, and even Pakistan in the past).

>>265132481

I know. Might even get another case of aliens and other such nonsense. It's crazy how few people care to think for themselves. Sifting through threads here is analogous to sifting TV channels, back in the 00's and earlier. Entirely mindless behavior.

>problem is fundation and the underpressure
Elaborate. What exactly are the modes of failure for dams?

>Grandma might fall down the stairs and break her hip

GFDTSABHH general #1

Grandma has been seen approaching the stairs. Total communication blockout.

Stairs may be made in China! These are the steepest stairs Grandma has climbed in 70 years.
